Hi Kylee!

I was reading your blog and it reminded me of the time when I began to learn crocheting from my teacher at school and my mother at home. I remember I learnt how to crochet in the seventh grade. I saw my mother crocheting some scarves and winter hats as well as small blankets. I was so fascinated that I learnt it very quickly and I crocheted some hats too. The crocheting that I enjoyed the most was, making laces and borders around my dresses and scarves. There might be hardly any of my dress or a scarf, without crochet creativity. I couldn't manage the time to have that creativity active still but I strongly believe, its a relaxing and satisfying art

Hi Ashley!

Photography is very close to my heart. It would be quite intriguing to read about your blog as it might help me improve and work on my photography skills.

Photography fascinates me a lot but I don't have a lot of understanding about various photography skills. I agree with you that smartphones are improving with each new model but it can't replace a DSLR or

and leave you stress free through yoga or with various different exercises. I chose to comment on your blog as yoga is also one of my favourite hobbies to do and I'm trying to build my stamina consistently but struggling to increase the timings per session. The good thing is, I am determined to have it in my daily life, mainly before bedtime. I research a lot about different healthy practices to keep yourself healthy and strong. I believe, being more aware about yourself and how to take care of your health

Hi Megan,

It was fascinating to read your blog and how you made a realistic goal to get started to ease and leave you stress free through yoga or with various different exercises. I chose to comment on your blog as yoga is also one of my favourite hobbies to do and I'm trying to build my stamina consistently but struggling to increase the timings per session. The good thing is, I am determined to have it in my daily life, mainly
